Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm writing to apply for the Sales Representative role at Minear Group. "We help people build themselves" is a line that actually stopped me — that's exactly what I've been doing on my own for the past year, and I want to do it properly, with real coaching and a real path forward.

I don't have sales experience, but I have the things you say matter more: I'm competitive, coachable, and genuinely driven to improve. Over the past year I taught myself to independently design, build, and launch three live software products with zero formal training, simply because I set the goal and refused to stop until it worked. As Project Manager on a university capstone, I led a 5-person team from initial client requirements through to a live production launch — my first real taste of leadership, setting expectations, and being accountable for a result, not just a contribution.

I also bring two years of direct, recurring client-facing experience from VIP Cleaning Services, where I consistently scored 95% in client quality surveys and proactively introduced standardised checklists that lifted site quality scores by 25% — because "good enough" isn't something I'm satisfied with. In a separate warehouse role, I maintained 99.5% accuracy across 200–300 orders a day and found a way to cut picking time by 20% on my own initiative.

I'm great with people, reliable, and ready to challenge myself for real long-term growth — not just another pay cheque. I'd love the chance to have a conversation about what that could look like with your team.

Thank you for considering my application.

Kind regards,

Priyanshu
