Dear Hiring Manager,

I'm writing to apply for the Entry Level Sales Representative role at All Australian Marketing. The idea of getting out there, engaging directly with the public, and inspiring people to support causes that genuinely matter is exactly the kind of work I want to throw myself into — and I think I'd be good at it.

I have two years of direct, recurring client-facing experience with VIP Cleaning Services, where I consistently scored 95% in client quality surveys by building rapport and adjusting how I communicated to connect with each person. I also spotted a gap in service consistency on my own initiative and introduced standardised checklists that lifted site quality scores by 25% — I don't wait to be told what to fix, I just do it.

What I think really sets me apart is my "student mentality" in practice, not just on paper. I hold a Bachelor of Information Technology, and over the past year I taught myself to independently design, build, and launch three live software products with zero formal training — including Call-a-Technician (callatechnician.com.au), where I led a 5-person team as Project Manager and was the direct relationship-builder with a real client. That's proof I can pick up a completely new skill fast and run with it — exactly what you'd need from someone learning your product training and pitch.

I'm outgoing, genuinely enjoy talking to people, and I'm motivated by clear goals and incentives. I'm also open to travelling for the role, which I understand is part of what makes this opportunity exciting.

Thank you for considering my application — I'd love the chance to bring my energy to your team.

Kind regards,

Priyanshu
